FCC Commissioner Tate,

We Americans know and understand that competition is good for consumers and every time it has been squelched, not only do consumers lose, but so does America. This country was built on competition because it gives reason and hope for Americans to enter such competition and many Americans lose better products yearly because small companies cannot compete with large corporations. In today's corporate world many products and services are controlled by a few corporations . . . and, our country loses.

The Internet is the best thing this country has had for all Americans in a very long time. It connects us with the whole world. I'm asking you to please issue a public statement in support of Internet Access for all Americans and not just a few, before this comes to a vote. Please stand up and stand out for new competition and open networks. Many people across this country will not have access because they live outside city limits or the costs will be controlled by large corporate America where only the privileged will be able to afford wireless Internet. We want national wireless Internet. Equality for all America and not just a few.

We Americans who live in small towns across this nation need your help. Just as thousands of people went without electricity for fifty years after US cities had it . . . why should this happen again with the access to wireless Internet.

A Very Special Thanks to You,

Shirley Smith
Longview, TX
